SAN PEDRO SPRINGS PARK CONSERVANCY

Doug McMurry
SATA City Liaison

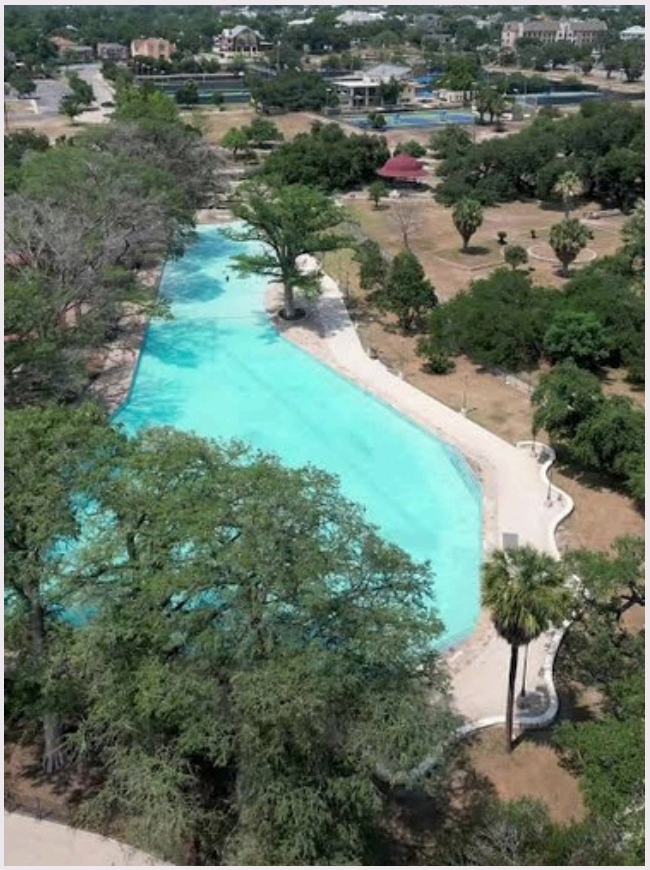

Creating a vibrant and enduring landmark where the springs, nature, culture, and history come together.

San Pedro Springs Park is the oldest park in Texas, and it needs a little help. It was designated a public park by King Philip V in 1729. And although it has had several face lifts since, there is more work to be done. That's why a group of dedicated parks advocates recently formed the San Pedro Springs Parks Conservancy.

A year ago, Councilmember Sukh Kaur organized a steering committee to work with advocates and stakeholders to form a conservancy. After several community meetings, the official kick-off event for the group was held at the park Wednesday, September 23. SATA and the McFarlin Tennis Center were represented at the kick-off.

The conservancy's mission is to "steward a park that celebrates the rich history, culture, and nature of Texas' oldest park." And the group's vision, as stated on the organization's website, is "to create a vibrant and enduring landmark where the springs, nature, culture, and history come together." Your suggestions about how to accomplish that, including ideas about improving the tennis center, are welcome.

Since last fall, the conservancy has been working closely with the city's Parks and Recreation Department to finish the work envisioned in the 2022 bond program which includes shade structures and renovation of the swimming pool bathhouse. The group is also working with stakeholders and neighborhood associations on plans for the 2027 bond election. Currently, those plans include preserving the grotto, restoring the Formal Victorian Garden, and building a major addition to the historic San Antonio Playhouse.

According to the conservancy chairperson, Christina Wright, "Texas's oldest park deserves better than it's gotten." VIA announced its commitment of $25,000 a year for three years during the kick-off. Now, there is a group in place with financial resources to sustain the effort to make a good park, a great park. If you would like to learn more, visit the website at www.spspconservancy.org
